PART 2

Describe an article on health you read in a magazine or on the Internet

What it was

Where you read it

Why you read it

And how you felt about it

I want to talk about an article I read online last month. It was a simple story about the benefits of drinking water every day. I found it on a popular health website called "Healthline" while I was scrolling through my Facebook feed.

I decided to read it because, at that time, I often felt quite tired during the day and I noticed my skin was very dry. I wanted to find a way to feel better without taking medicine. The article explained that drinking at least two liters of water every day is very important for our brain and our body. It said that water helps us stay awake and makes our skin look much healthier.

After reading it, I felt very happy and motivated. I realized that I was not drinking enough water before. The advice was very easy to follow, so I started carrying a water bottle with me everywhere. Now, I feel much more energetic than before. I think it was a very useful article because it taught me a simple way to improve my health without spending a lot of money.

1. What can parents do to help improve their children's health awareness?

Parents can do many things to help their children be healthy. First, they should cook healthy meals at home with many vegetables and fruits. They also need to play sports with their kids, like football or swimming, during the weekend. Because children always follow their parents' actions, if the parents have a healthy lifestyle, the children will learn those good habits too. It is the best way to teach them about staying strong and avoiding fast food.

2. Do schools have the responsibility to provide health education?

Yes, I think schools must have the responsibility to teach about health. Students spend most of their day at school, so teachers can show them how to eat well and stay clean. Schools should also have more physical education classes so students can exercise every day. It is very important because not all parents have time to teach these things at home. If schools provide health education, every student will know how to take care of their bodies.

3. Where can people find information about keeping healthy?

People can find information about health in many different places today. Most people use the Internet or watch videos on YouTube to learn about new exercises or healthy recipes. Also, they can go to the local hospital and ask a doctor for professional advice. Some people still like reading health magazines or books to learn about nutrition. In my opinion, the internet is the fastest way, but we must check if the information is actually true and safe.
